Key Risk Factors:

For Accumulators, you will be obliged to buy the underlying at a price higher than the underlying's prevailing market price if the prevailing market price of the underlying falls below the forward price. Further, you will not be able to continue to accumulate the underlying if its prevailing market price rises to or above the barrier or trigger price which is typically set above the initial price.

Accumulator may or may not be a leveraged product. Leverage/Gearing increases risks significantly. A relatively small market movement will have a proportionally larger impact on the funds you have invested or may have to invest. This can work for you as well as against you. A variety of factors (such as option volatility, Coupon rates, underlying prices, time etc) will affect the price/value of the product at any point in time. [Nomura will be marked to market and any change in these factors can have a significant adverse impact on the value of the investment. Standard top-up and sell-out rules will apply and you may be required at short notice to make additional margin Investments or liquidate your position at a significant loss if you trade it on margin basis]

Accumulator is one of the OTC based financial instruments and the investor should be aware that there are various risks associated with investing and transacting in such OTC based financial instruments. All OTC Derivatives involve risks which include the risk of adverse or unanticipated market, financial or political development, risk relating to the counterparty, liquidity risk and other risks of a complex character. In the event that such risks arise, substantial costs and/or losses may be incurred. Please refer to the risks stated under the heading of "Accumulators/Decumulators" in the Risk Disclosure Statement of Nomura Master Agreement for Derivative Transaction, which is required to be signed by the investor in order to trade such OTC based financial instruments.
